The value of electrical inventions has received a fresh illustration in the case of the seasoner Vermillion, which was wrecked in Like Erie in 1843. The vessel was loaded with copper ingots of the value of $80,000 but her precises location far down in deep water was for thirty-four years a 'mystery. It remained for electricity to solve the mystery. With a newly-invented electric indicator on board a cruising schooner evidences of the proximity of submerged metal were at last obtained, and last Saturday the season of a man it is twice a true of the season when were at last obtained, and last Saturday divers were sent down to search. rankfurter Volkszeitung publishes some interesting statistics of the world's correspondence by post and telegraph. The latest returns which approached completeness were for the year 1877, in which more than 4,000,000,000,000 letters were sent, which gives an average of 11,000,000 a day, or 127 a second. Europe contributed 3,036,000,000 to this enormous masse of correspondence; America about 760,000,000, Asia, 150,000,000, Africa, 25,000,000, and Australia, 50,000,000, Assuming that the population of the globe was between 1,300,000,000 and 1,400,000,000, this would give an average of three letters per head for the entire human race. There were in the same year 38,000 telegraph stations, and the number of mestelegraph stations, and the number of mestween 110,000,000 and 111,000,000, being an average of more than 305,000 messages per day, 13,671 per hour, and nearly 12 per

The New York Herald believes that the selection of Long Branch will prove to be a good medicine for the President. It says:

The selection of Long Branch as a sanitarium for the President at the present lime is perhaps the best that could have been made. A mountain resort at this part of the season is open to the grave objection that the nocturnal changes of temperature are often very considerable, while the sun has still so much power by day and the dryness of the air admits of the earth's rapid radiation of its heat. There can be no doubt that for a weak and wasted invalid sea air is generally the best conservator of his strength and most likely to give tone to his strength and most likely to give tone to his system. The average range of temperature at Long Branch in September is not more than 38 degrees, and a little less in October, showing that in these months it has almost an insular climate. The sanitary value of such a climate is strikingly shown by the British metorologist, Buchan, who states that "mortality" bruggist, Weeling, W. Va.

death rate increased." The transition from Washington to the Jersey coast may therefore be expected to give the President naw life. While the fall temperature at Long Branch is equable it is not too low for the comfort of an invalid. The minimum in September, judging by the records of neighboring points, is not likely at any time to be below 40 degress. With a normal barometric pressue averaging 30.00 inches through the two months named, and the prevailing wo months named, and the prevailing winds from the south and southwest, the nation's sufferer will have in his new quarters all that an American climate is capable of ministering to his restoration. The only adverse features of the Jersey coast for the invalid will be the "northeasters" which may be felt. But their advent may be postponed until near the close of September, by which time it is to be hoped he will strong enough to be indifferent to weather changes.
